Good news for Alexa users, Spotify users, and for anyone who's learned to use Echo (and likes how it works) in the last few years. Someone's finally built a working Spotify app for Echo. It's called EchoPod. EchoPod is like Echo for Spotify, but with a working app that lets you play music through your (connected) speakers as well as ring and play a song randomly. Alexa doesn't have Spotify — but now you can play music right through Echo using EchoPod. The app works on all Echo speakers and revs up with Spotify on the Echo Plus, also known as the second-gen Echo. (You can upgrade your existing Amazon Echo or borrow a friend's for free; the original Echo uses the Dot.) How do you know if you have the right Echo speaker? Look for the new release of Echo software on your phone app, or the update on Echo. EchoPod officially launched today at the Fortnite World Cup concert in Las Vegas, sponsored by Apple, Spotify, and Twitch. You'll have to trick out a speaker (or buy a new one) though. EchoPod hasn't yet been released on the Apple Store, Google Play Store, or even Amazon's Appstore for Echo. I imagine the app will arrive soon though, and be coming to the Amazon Appstore as well as the others soon. You can follow the developer's progress on their Instagram or GitHub. Snapchat's new proper app for Alexa is also due to finally release soon — but it's already been available on iOS for months. So what do you get with EchoPod (like Spotify)? Not a lot — only what you already know. When you first wake up Alexa, you have this lovely set up at the start: EchoPod

Try to go undetected. Take evasive actions to avoid detection. Small targets are easier to see and avoid. Maintain stealth to evade detection by enemy guards, cameras, motion detectors and other security devices. Destroy cameras and other sensors. MicroSpy is a simple game - there's no inventory or checkpoint system. Everything you need is right in front of you. MicroSpy is your fault. You're an enemy spy. You're on a mission and you're currently trespassing. In addition to the enemies, you're being detected by a bunch of security cameras. They're going to shoot you if they get the chance. They're all going to blame you. The Data storage center is wide open. There's nothing you can do about it. You're screwed. Suddenly, you notice you're under attack by a bunch of angry gorilla goons. To add to the problem, you've got a C4 that's about to go off. How are you going to prevent them from killing you, you think? Quickly improvise an escape. You're an agent. Agents like to improvise and think fast. However, the gorillas are very fast as well. Jump away, or delay the C4 so it doesn't go off. Take cover when possible. Use it. Your goal is to infiltrate enemy facilities and steal some of the most important data. Instructions: To play MicroSpy you need a mouse. You need to move the mouse to manipulate the camera. The first level is only 5 minutes. You start out in a small room, and then you go to a huge big room with 4 bosses. There's lots of going between rooms to get data, and going to the roof to hack into systems. You will need to make sure not to get detected. You can't save this game, but there's a brief pause to load a save state between levels. The game is short, but there's a lot of stuff going on. There's no inventory, no checkpoints. ReviewsSeems fair, but after playing the game, we can't see it. Probably should have read the small text above it a bit more carefully. Downloaded it but the file isn't very large.Probably because it's a modified copy of the game.Download file August 2, 2014 I looked all over the web, I went to different stores and even other review sites.
