FIFA is seeing 50 percent growth year on year and just last month, EA Mobile announced its EA SPORTS FIFA World Cup title’s global player count hit 5 million, which is the largest number of players ever for an EA SPORTS FIFA game. The movement of the player during play is captured by cameras mounted on the player’s back and is reviewed by dedicated engineers who use software to create a representation of the player’s running style. “We believe it represents the first time that a player’s movement and realism have been scaled to this level of granularity,” said Peter Moore, executive vice president and group general manager of EA SPORTS, EA Canada. “The use of this technology allowed us to create more spectacular goals and the more realistic ball physics and ball control.” EA SPORTS FIFA’s most-requested features from the fans will be implemented this year, including the return of the long-requested No Kick in 1v1 gameplay mode. This year’s addition of No Kick in 1v1 mode marks the fourth year EA SPORTS FIFA has focused on this long-requested feature. Three new camera angles were implemented in this year’s game and fans will now see more than 20 different camera angles in the new FIFA World Cup “Global Match Day” cinematic camera mode. The new camera angles give the player a more 360-degree perspective of the game from the ball, as if the camera was mounted in the middle of the field. The First Touch Control system was also implemented, which allows players to control the pace and direction of the ball even when using a D-pad controller. “The First Touch Control system was one of the most asked-for features by fans, and it is now all about perfecting the experience of being an elite player,” said Moore. “The team has done an amazing job of listening to fan feedback, and to realize their dream of putting players in the best position to make ‘the play’, during the best moments of a match.” Developed by the same engine as FIFA 17, the new FIFA World Cup “Global Match Day” cinematic camera angle delivers a unique cinematographic experience like no other soccer game. This year’s game features a new camera angle, which gives players an epic, 360-degree look at the game from the ball, while still allowing the
