After all, the rest of us will soon be contending with dearth, flood, famine, plague, disease, and war, not to mention the "on going" possibility that the One will turn His/Her back upon us. For those of us who live here in the San Fernando Valley, an extra month may seem like a long time to wait before there is sufficient rain to replenish the ponds and the rivers, and the hatching of the guinea hens, turkeys, ducks, chickens and quail is now pretty much complete. When the Santa Ana winds come in the fall, our golf courses may soon be covered with snow and our garbage cans will be overloaded. The air will be scented with almond trees in blossom and roses in bloom. And I won't be here. I won't be in the sanctorum with my catholic brethren, or preaching sermons at the great basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe, or walking to church along the quaint and narrow streets of old San Fernando. And if I were, I wouldn't be writing this article. But that doesn't mean you

What's new in Gates Of Devoroth:

or something along those lines - at least several more golden robotgirlmachines should have been shoved headlong into the water to prevent me from naming that one...Anyway! All those retro and remakes should have appeared back in 1985, and I swear I'm not peeved at Sony Pictures or Universal. And the conclusion is something along the lines of 'wait and see' to me. Proba. I agree with you. Until they can make long-term decisions on how to be profitable, they're not making any long-term decisions at all. The entertainment business like most others have to adapt to the digital world. They're behind like every other industry and the thought of them doing anything to jeopardise their changes is a joke. We must be sceptical and I want to hope I won't be proven wrong with future proofing plans before it is too late. [quote=thafate] I agree with you. Until they can make long-term decisions on how to be profitable, they're not making any long-term decisions at all. The entertainment business like most others have to adapt to the digital world. They're behind like every other industry and the thought of them doing anything to jeopardise their changes is a joke. We must be sceptical and I want to hope I won't be proven wrong with future proofing plans before it is too late. I don't think we're ever going to see the golden robots again. Too corporate or whatever. Maybe the laws of physics forbid it (they do, right?), who knows. I can imagine a reboot "look how good things are now". A new godzilla in a new world, new designs, new taurus. The most important thing would be a new kaiju name (in the new world they could be from a different age, not the original). I'd expect a green gokusu, maybe with orange lights. Nope. Too geriatric. I'd rather they went over the inspired choices that went before than the "scrap for the sake of " - "I'm bored of the look, let's do something completely different". For example, I much prefer the '90s-era Godzilla 2 myself; I'm a sucker for giant robots, and giant robot anime and giant robot mechs in general. It's better to me that they didn't make a really cheesy version of 1998's Godzilla. The new Godzilla should have
