I tried something like myFile.addEventListener("open", function(){ alert("File opened"); }); it works if I open from a popup but it does not work if I open from the browser location bar. Can you please help with the correct way to catch that event? A: It sounds to me like you want to listen for the readystatechange event of the input element that opened the file. But to just get the event, the browser does NOT allow you to set this event handler. Instead, use an iframe and listen for the onreadystatechange event of that iframe. A: The "open" event is fired before the file is actually opened. Therefore, you can't actually detect it. But you might be interested in the "load" event. This event is fired whenever the contents of the file are loaded. The event listener: myFile.addEventListener("load", function() { alert("File loaded"); }); Double-balloon endoscopy with wireless near-infrared fluorescence imaging for suspected early gastric cancer.
