Heavy sedimentation is a severe environmental problem of eutrophic lakes. In order to understand the environmental impact of heavy sedimentation on water body, the current research focused on the characteristics of heavy sedimentation and the corresponding human impacts. The paper analyzed the methods, mechanism and the influences of heavy sedimentation on lake ecosystem. Based on the analysis on water quality, the authors concluded that the heavy sedimentation mainly affected the water quality of lakes by its impacts on the top layer of the water column and the water depth. Furthermore, the sediment quality and the distribution of sediment in water bodies were also discussed by analyzing the distribution of organic matter, indicating that the distribution of sediment was related to organic matter content and fluctuation of water quality. The heavy sedimentation decreased the proportion of dissolved organic matter in the water column and re-stored carbon, and further affected the ecological security of lake. In addition, since the sediment had the characteristics of stable organic matter and fine particles
