The aim of the paper is to consider and analyse the question of the existence of a discrete band in the measured photoelectron-emission spectrum. As an aid to analysis, a Bayesian model of mixed type is constructed to represent the mixed valence state. The methodology used in the paper is to construct a model that fits the behaviour of data for the mixed valence state. Within a Bayesian framework, we are able to construct prior distributions that allow us to incorporate the qualitative features of the data into the modelling and the inferences made. There is considerable scope for developing the methodology and methodology for applying it to other mixed valent systems and to more complex models D.S. available [1942] Journal of Algebra & Its Applications, 2, 51-72[abstract] - [pdf] - A Bayesian analysis of epistemic type in a way that reveals the degree of continuous or discrete type in a mixed state. A Bayesian analysis is made possible through the use of detailed summaries of a model that expresses the degree of certainty to be attributed to it in terms of a discrete probability distribution. We thus obtain both a Bayesian classifier and a Bayesian
